Health, Occupation and the Environment: Global Issues and Local Action and Updates in Occupational and Environmental Medicine

March 12-14, 2025

These courses are presented by the Division of Occupational, Environmental and Climate Medicine in the Department of Medicine at the University of California San Francisco. They provide targeted reviews of one topic area along with a broader update of current topics in occupational and environmental health. The curriculum is designed for occupational and environmental health professionals, including occupational physicians and nurses, and industrial hygienists. It also meets the needs of primary care providers and others engaged in practice and research, including physicians (family medicine practitioners, internists, emergency medicine specialists), advanced practice nurses and other nursing professionals, and physician assistants. Policy makers and medico-legal practitioners also benefit from the curriculum offered.

The first day of the 2025 course, Health, Occupation, and the Environment: Global Issues and Local Action, will focus on global issues in Occupational and Environmental Health and be held in honor of the late Dr. Joseph “Joe” LaDou, MD., a great teacher and editor of a definitive textbook in occupational and environmental medicine.

The second and third days will cover challenging cases in Occupational and Environmental Medicine, Generative AI, Integrative Medicine and effective advocacy for patients and communities. This year’s conference will also include breakout sessions, interactive demonstrations, and other opportunities to interact with the presenters and other attendees. A poster session will be held during afternoon of the second day to showcase work from students, trainees, and other participants. A call for posters will be issued prior to the meeting.

TARGET AUDIENCE

This course is designed to provide the experienced clinician with a review of the epidemiology, and the evaluation of occupational and environmental diseases and injuries. The curriculum will also include a substantial component focused on issues specifically pertinent to occupationally, and climate environmentally related disease. Most attendees will be occupational physicians, but some are specialists in related fields who will profit by an in-depth presentation of occupational and environmental medicine topics. Thus, although targeted for physicians, some non-physicians, in particular graduate nurses, usually attend and benefit from the curriculum. Some attendees are from developing countries where physicians are not available to provide consultation to industry for the development of health and safety programs; others have been U.S. nurse practitioners who play a pivotal role in occupational health.

OBJECTIVES

Attendees completing this course will be able to:

- Analyze the evolving landscape of Occupational and Environmental Health (OEH) practice by identifying emerging challenges related to climate change, planetary health, and patient-centered integrative care to improve competency in addressing complex clinical cases.
- Apply evidence-based strategies and systematic approaches to assess and manage challenging OEH cases, incorporating integrative and multidisciplinary perspectives that align with current trends and best practices in the field.
- Develop a comprehensive approach to patient and community health by integrating knowledge of climate and environmental factors with traditional occupational health practices to enhance clinical outcomes and address broader public health concerns.
